local rules and may, as needed, year. Practitioners should follow quantum and level of procedures infection control based on the locate a budget specifically for tious disease status. knowledge of the patients' infecticipated clinical procedures to olic and practical training of future dental healthcare work-pts. Practicing dentists must be state-of-the-art protocols for

In conclusion, one should al-cational institutions should be infection control and safety. Edurials and equipment needed in facilitate the availability of mate-tional and local governments Regional, nalancing occupational exposures and involve in developing a basic curriculum that includes both didactic and practical training of LITERATURE

1. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Guidelines for Infection Control in Dental Health-Caresettings — 2003. MMWR 2003; 52(No.RR-17): 1–76.
2. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Recommended infec-tion control practices for dentistry, 1995. MMWR 1995; 44 3. A. S. Kravitz and E. T. Treasure, The dentistry, 1993. MMWR 1993; 42 nari J, Terezhalmy G, Moliniration of Toxicology: Infection management. In: Sachdeva R, Bartleon ectal and patients in the operatory.
13. Puttaiah R & Cooley R. Infection control & Safety. You may e-mail him at puttaiah.raghunath@gmail.com about the author Dr. Raghunath (Raghu) Puttaiah BDS, MPhil, FICD is a termed Associate Professor in Diagnostic Science, and the Direct of Infection Control at Baylor College of Dentistry, TAMUS HSC, Dallas, Texas, USA. He was the first recipient of the JIMI Postdoctoral Fellowship in Dental Infection Control. He is an active researcher and a consultant and has lectured at many national and international meetings on Dental Infection Control & Safety. You may e-mail him at puttaiah.raghunath@gmail.com