Creating a selling culture

Providing dentistry is all about selling your product, giving patients correct and honest information and providing them with options that help them find ways to best suit their financial circumstances. Lina Craven explains

There is little resemblance between the healthcare industry today and the industry we worked in 10 years ago. Technology, industrial relations, economic circumstances, legislation, patient care and expectations have all influenced the dental sector and facilitated the changes we see within practices today. Practices continuing to offer the same services, in the same environment, with the same expectations of team contribution today, as they did in the 20th century, would cease to exist. Customer satisfaction is fundamental to business success and that's why the best results are achieved by those practices that create a passion for continual improvement.

Continual improvement

Culture is the shared beliefs and values of a group of people, and in this case that group is your team. Creating any sort of culture within your practice requires the constant reinforcement of a specific message. In the case of continual improvement that message must be that it is OK for team members to regularly review the way things are done, to question why they are done that way, and to ask if there is a better way of doing it. Such an approach doesn't encourage anarchy as some of you might believe; in fact it does quite the opposite. By giving team members responsibility for moulding the practice they develop a sense of ownership that is visible in every aspect of their performance. All the things you had been striving to achieve and implement through a hierarchical, perhaps more dictatorial approach, suddenly begin to happen.

A prime example of this phenomenon is selling. Often just expressing the word within a practice is like committing blasphemy. The notion that selling and professionalism can co-exist is not readily accepted within our industry along with the belief that patients do not welcome being sold to. I would like to dispel that assumption.

Selling is what patients want and demand

Modern dentistry requires a whole new approach. It isn't just about looking and finding problems, it's about asking the right questions, explaining the options, educating and supporting, and offering the most appropriate services - in any other language that is selling!

A survey of patients from practices across the UK indicated that only two per cent said they were interested in being informed. So the patient - the customer - wants to be educated, but their practices were not forthcoming with information, probably because they perceived it
Surgery design - We offer you:
- Site visits to determine client requirements, flooring dimensions and current service layouts.
- Full brief – including client appointments at our showroom.
- Demonstration of extensive variety of products based on ergonomicism, specification, aesthetics and types of dentistry.
- Create and discuss several concepts leading to final solution and CAD plans and elevations.
- Provision of service plans and requirements.
- Full project management and QA from start of project to completion with dedicated Project Engineer to manage and provide customer support.
- Experienced building and service crews available to keep “down-time” and disruption to a minimum whilst maintaining a high level of quality.
- Friendly, knowledgeable service from trained and experienced staff.

Hague Dental Supplies offer sales, design and engineering services to the dental industry.

In London, Hague have one of the largest showrooms in the UK, viewings are available by appointment (inc out of hours):
- Hague also offer engineering and maintenance service packages on your equipment at agreed intervals to suit your needs. At the depot, in Surrey, Hague stock a huge selection of parts and equipment – in order to get you back up and running fast in an emergency.

Engineering solutions – We offer you:
- Typically a “one call-out” solution from our own engineers.
- Full diagnostic and repair facilities with trained, experienced engineers.
- Service packages for new and existing equipment at agreed intervals.
- A vast stock of parts and equipment available from our depot in Surrey – in order to get you back up and running fast in an emergency.
- Full telephone support and out of hours servicing.

Hague Dental Supplies Ltd, Trident Business Centre, 89 Bickersteth Road, Tooting Broadway, London SW17 9SH 0800 298 5003 www.haguedental.com

Practice Management

We might not feel comfortable talking about money but it is expected and necessary.

Know your products
We often find that practice staff do not understand many of the products and services provided. They are confused with different levels of private treatment and can’t explain differences between treatments or financial packages. It is imperative that everyone interacting with patients fully understands the products and services they are selling. It doesn’t have to be technical, but an awareness of the key features and benefits is paramount.

Talk money
We must be able to present the customer with details of how much the treatment will cost. We might not feel comfortable talking about money but it is expected and necessary. Make the buying decision effortless and honourable.

Close the deal
How many ways do you know to ask for the order? When would you like to start? May I go ahead and book the appointment for you? Are you ready to proceed? As long as you have fully explained the benefits of treatment, it’s not unreasonable to ask for commitment from the patient. As the saying goes, what you don’t ask for, you don’t get.

Breaking down barriers
What’s in it for me? (WIFI).

The goal, a win-win outcome, is only achieved by overcoming barriers and concerns. We must learn to understand patients’ needs and wants, and to be able to express ourselves without sounding pushy or forceful. Learning to ask the right questions is of the utmost importance. Not all patients will be ready to proceed after the initial appointment but never assume that they never will.

It’s all about giving patients correct and honest information and providing them with options that help them find ways to best suit their financial circumstances. It’s not always the obvious answer. It may call it, in any other industry that’s called selling. By engendering an environment where the needs of the patients come first and where the team is encouraged to constantly think of better ways of fulfilling those needs, you create a culture of confidence, support and success where selling is part of meeting the customers’ expectations. You are a business that provides a service and therefore everyone in the team must understand that it is OK to ask for money – and that it is OK to charge for services. After all, the customers understand it.

About the author

Lina Craven is the founder and director of Dynamic Perceptions. Over the past 25 years, she has assisted dental practices to realise their vision of success through the achievement of a customer-driven culture that focuses on delivering an exceptional patient journey. Lina’s qualifications and experience as an orthodontic therapist, treatment co-ordinator and practice manager in the US have given her a unique insight into the day-to-day practical problems faced by dental practices. Visit www.orthodontic-management.com or call 01844 275527.