I n a move which has thrown open the deep divisions within the General Dental Council (GDC), Alison Lockyer, Chair of the GDC, has resigned from both the position of Chair and her seat on the Council.

With rumours circulating amongst dental grapevines that there was to be a vote of no confidence, Dr Lockyer issued the following: “It is with regret that I have decided to resign from my post as Chair of the General Dental Council, and also from my appointment on the GDC.

It would not be appropriate at the moment for me to go into detail about my reasons for resigning, suffice to say that, over the last few months, there have been issues that have caused me concern.

I remain passionate about the importance of protecting the public through professional self-regulation. The situation at the GDC has caused concern amongst many of the professional organisations in dentistry, who are calling for an explanation of the situation to restore confidence in the regulator.

A statement by the British Dental Association (BDA) said: “The BDA is seriously concerned at the suddenness of Dr Lockyer’s resignation and the observation she has made in the statement. We are calling for the situation to be clarified as a matter of urgency.

The profession’s confidence in the regulator depends upon the integrity and robustness of the decisions it makes and it is important that the Chair is elected by the Council.

Dental Protection has also voiced its concerns at the situation. Kevin Lewis, Dental Director, said: “Dental Protection has been voicing its concerns for some time now that certain aspects of the GDC’s work left a lot to be desired. The Fitness to Practise procedures were a case in point, as recently confirmed by the largely critical CHRE report, while some of the recent policy decisions also suggested a fundamental lack of understanding of the dynamics of the profession and its relationship with the public.

“The dignified departure of Alison Lockyer as GDC Chair, and the measured but pointed terms of her public comments as she left office, should set alarm bells ringing that something profoundly disturbing has been happening at the GDC. It is clear that the departing Chair has formally raised concerns with the relevant authorities about the internal operation of the GDC at a senior level, and these concerns are bound to be clarified. If public and professional confidence is to be maintained, Divisions are self-evident between some of the lay and professional members, and also between some Council members and the GDC Executive and staff. This is not good news for patients, and coincidentally it is not good news for the profession either at a time of such enormous challenge.”

The GDC is remaining tight-lipped about the current situation. A statement issued on behalf of the GDC said: Alison Lockyer has resigned as Chair of the General Dental Council and as a member of the Council.

We would like to thank Alison for her service as Chair since January 2010 and as a member of the Council since 2001. We wish her well for the future.

The GDC will now consider the process for appointing a new Chair and any interim arrangements needed to ensure the continued smooth running of business.

According to reports, the GDC will meet this week to appoint an interim chair, with a successor to be elected at the Council’s September meeting, when hustings will be held.

Is something rotten in the state of GDC?

Recipe for success
Orthodontists recommend steering clear of certain foods which are likely to damage braces; however instead of which are likely to damage the body’s defence against infection and disease. Researchers at the Fox Chase Cancer Center in Philadelphia have now found that poor psychosocial functioning is associated with greater vascular endothelial growth factor (VEGF) expression, a signalling protein that stimulates tumour growth. However, it has been noted that the study cannot be used to determine any cause or effect between psychosocial issues and disease progression.

IADR Honours Professor
Professor Aïka Dens, Head and Chair of Periodontology and Director of Research at the UCL Eastman Dental Institute, has received the 2011 IADR/Straumann Award for Regenerative Periodontal Medicine, in recognition of her outstanding contribution to research in this specialist field. The prestigious award was presented at the 89th General Session of the International Association for Dental Research, which took place in March at the San Diego Convention Centre in California. The IADR/Straumann Award for Regenerative Periodontal Medicine was presented by Professor Ivan Darby, President of the IADR Periodontal Research Group and Professor Michel Dard, Head of Preclinical Research at Straumann, the award’s company sponsor.
