BACD Protocols: Improving patient treatment

In order to assist their members in every aspect of their work, the British Academy of Cosmetic Dentistry provides a number of professional guidelines on best practice, so that clinicians can gain valid consent.

The context of development of consent within dentistry is that it is a legal and ethical process to ensure that patients are properly informed before any procedures or treatments are undertaken. When the entire process of consent is fully documented and carried out in a manner that is appropriate, patients are aware of the treatment, the likely outcomes and risks, the possible alternatives and the costs, clinicians can gain valid consent.
