The UCL Eastman Dental Institute: understanding and managing fearful patients

The UCL Eastman Dental Institute, in association with Neutro grind, is proud to present a one-day course for dental professionals who are faced with fearful patients. The course is designed to increase the understanding of how fearful patients react and to equip participants with practical strategies for managing fearful patients.

Part-time MSc in restorative dental practice

UCL Eastman Dental Institute invites dental practitioners to develop their skills in restorative dental practice with an MSc in Restorative Dental Practice. The MSc programme is full of restorative dentist educational programmes that are designed to carry out highly topical practice-based research on a subject related to restorative dental practice and they have the chance to participate in leading-edge dental practice within their own dental practice. Support is available from accomplished UCL Eastman Dental Institute staff who provide supervision and support. Attendance at a Dental Research Conference is required together with the completion of three four days is required, and this provides all the necessary tools for undertaking an original research project, which will be presented in a viva voce examination. A minimum of 2000 word, in-depth dissertation. The MSc programme runs every year and places are highly sought after. To apply, email applications should be received by the deadline of 30th September 2011, subject to availability.

The BACD Conference: not to be missed

For the past seven years the British Academy of Cosmetic Dentistry (BACD) has organised an annual conference of cosmetic dentistry for practitioners to network with each other and discuss a range of topics in detail.

The BACD conference is the perfect opportunity for dental professionals to network and advance their knowledge, whilst earning CPD.

You can register for the BACD conference at www.bacd.co.uk and priority will be given to BACD members. Registration before the end of September will attract a 10 per cent discount. In addition, this first day will provide you with a free prize draw with the chance of winning a Venus Master's Composite Kit. Alternatively, registration forms can be downloaded from the website or taken from the conference brochure and should be sent to Mrs Suzy Rowlands, British Academy of Cosmetic Dentistry, 29 Harley Street, London W1G 9QR.
