Walking among giants
Marketing dentistry in the global connected economy

By Chris Barrow, UK

In an information-rich world, the wealth of information means a dearth of something else: a scarcity of whatever it is that information consumes. What information consumes is rather obvious: it consumes the attention of its recipients. Hence a wealth of information creates a poverty of attention. These prophetic lines were shared by Nobel laureate and social scientist Dr Herbert Simon in 1971. It seems incredible to think that his words predate the Internet by 20 years. Simon lived in a world in which advertisers tried to gain our attention with billboards, newspaper advertisements and television commercials. At the same time, the local ma-and-pa business prospered through convenience and human interest.

The connected economy and growth in population have created statistics that are beyond our comprehension. There were 60 trillion websites at the last count and every year the Internet grows by eight million new songs, two million new books, 18,000 new films, 30 billion blog posts and 92 billion Tweets. Google handles 35 billion e-mails every day alone, and 8 billion photographs are uploaded to the Cloud from everywhere around the globe. I speculate as to how many of those photographs are of happy, smiling faces.

IBM tells us that we are “a world awash in data.” 80% of which is currently invisible to our computers; however, with the IBM Watson project, the company intends to use cognitive computing to bring that data into a usable domain. With global health care data expected to grow by 99% in the next 12 months, the search is on to find a new unified theory that will bring all of this information to the fingertips of government, business and individuals.

“The challenge is for the mouse to gain attention without competing with the bull elephants.”

Perhaps it is time to do the same with Homo Sapiens.”

A rather grim and ominous suggestion perhaps, but by jolting our sensibilities, Harari makes us pause for thought. Let us narrow our field of vision from these impossible numbers and facts. Pundits suggest that you and I are interrupted by advertising and brand exposures 4,000 times in an average day and mentally register around 350 of these. We note 150, think briefly about 80 and pause at around 350 of these. We note 150, think briefly about 80 and pause at 12 to think about whether they are relevant to us at this time. Thus, the challenge facing the dental marketer is how to become one of 12 out of 5,000 at the right time, on the right day, for the right person.

Big business has a simple solution to this problem, it is called big money. Whether it is a Super Bowl television commercial, a giant billboard on a motorway or, nowadays, massive expenditure on Internet visibility via paid media, those with the deepest pockets of – er – information data are sure to get through a well-maintained social media channel like Facebook or Twitter (and deliver personal daily human interest content). Remember that those 1.8 billion photographs upload per day include the inevitable selfies. Many of my clients now take a patient selfie at the end of a course of aesthetic dental treatment. To quote again from Harari’s new book: “If you experience something—record it. Experience something—record it. Harari’s new book: “If you experience something—record it. Experience something—record it.”

I have watched the world of digital marketing in dentistry very carefully over the last five years and have reached some conclusions that are likely to lead me in trouble with traditional digital marketers. However, I did not get where I am today without stepping on the fenced off grass every now and then, running along the side of the swimming pool and tearing up the rule book. So, here is my recommended list of actions to be taken by the independent dental practice in order to gain attention:

1. Use good search engine optimisation (SEO) to optimise your position in Google’s organic search. SEO is a technical skill that has to be delivered by experts. Google changes its own goalsposts regularly and the savvy SEO guru will know that and take appropriate action quickly.

2. Massively encourage the collection of Google reviews, user reviews via Facebook and critic reviews via proprietorial sites like WhatClinic.com, NHSChoices and CompareTheTreatment.com in the UK. In September 2016, Google changed the rules twice, first by including external reviews alongside its own in searches and then by altering its own search criteria to favour businesses with in excess of 100 Google reviews. It is necessary that your marketing activity be adjusted to reflect such changes?

3. Connect to your patients through a well-maintained social media channel like Facebook or Twitter (and deliver personal daily human interest content).

4. A website that engages the visitor through video and visual testimonials. Your most powerful marketing collateral is the stories that your patients can tell about the experience that you have made to their lives.

5. Collect visitor’s e-mail addresses and consent to e-mail via white paper marketing. A coffee shop, hotel or airport exchanges free Wi-Fi access for an e-mail address and permission to keep one informed. You can do the same by exchanging useful information (free guides).

6. Nurture long-term relationships with patients and pros-

Diploma in Operative Dentistry
A new two-year, part-time course, starting April 2017

An opportunity to enhance your operative skills while continuing to work in practice

Programme summary
• Designed for newly qualified dentists and experienced practitioners working in general practice.
• Develops technical, diagnostic and treatment planning skills to practice modern clinical operative dentistry.
• Delivers a blend of practical training, clinical practice under supervision, and seminars.

Find out more and apply:
www.kcl.ac.uk/study/postgraduate/taught-courses/operative-dentistry-pg-dip.aspx

King’s College Hospital NHS Foundation Trust
I have given you nine marketing actions designed especially for the smaller business. Actions that should be avoided by the independent dental practice are seeking to gain attention by paying through the nose for Google or Facebook advertising, broadcasting non-human interest material or selling services on price, discount or special offer. This is because every week I hear from dentists and their marketing teams that advertising to strangers, using jargon and cutting prices at best attract nobody and at worst attract bargain-hunters, price-shoppers and messers.

“A wealth of information creates a poverty of attention.” We end where we began. The challenge is for the mouse to gain attention without competing with the bull elephants. You can only do that by stepping away from the herd of elephants and delivering your story in a different way and a different place. For me, that means human interest, personal service and recommendation, and so when I am working with clients on their marketing plans, we focus on and mobilise their most valuable asset: the goodwill of their existing patients.

Template for end-of-treatment protocol

So Mr Patient, now that we have arrived at the end of your course of treatment, I’d like to ask a couple of questions:

• Are you happy with the clinical outcome?
• Are you happy with the customer service that the team delivered?

If so, I’d like to ask some favours:

1. We are growing the practice at the moment and we would like to see new patients and would love to see more people like you, because we like you! Would it be OK to give you three of my referral business cards to pass on to any family, friend or colleague who may be interested in visiting our practice?

2. We have noticed that online reviews are growing in importance and would like to invite you to submit a review of your experience on Google, Facebook or any other review site that you may be connected to.

3. We love to collect testimonials from happy patients. They are great for our marketing and can give confidence to others who may be nervous. We find that 90% of those who do consent to a testimonial prefer a written commentary, as they are uncomfortable with a video camera recording, whereas 10% are happy to be filmed and photographed. May I ask, are you a 90%er or a 10%er?

4. If a 90%er, I’d love to organise a written testimonial from you.

5. If a 10%er, we would like to invite you to one of our quarterly video testimonial evenings here at the practice. Every three months, we set aside some time early evening and invite four to six of our 10%ers to come along for some light refreshments and to have their photographs taken professionally (at our expense) and to be filmed for 4 minutes or so. The questions we ask on video are: How did you find us originally? What was it that had you looking? How was your customer service experience? What difference did the treatment make? It would be lovely to invite you to our next event. The dates are...

9. Employ a strict end-of-treatment protocol to capture reviews, testimonials and social connections (as well as plan membership).

I have given you nine marketing actions designed especially for the smaller business. Actions that should be avoided by the independent dental practice are seeking to gain attention by paying through the nose for Google or Facebook advertising, broadcasting non-human interest material or selling services on price, discount or special offer. This is because every week I hear from dentists and their marketing teams that advertising to strangers, using jargon and cutting prices at best attract nobody and at worst attract bargain-hunters, price-shoppers and messers.