ClearCorrect reaches new milestone with charitable clean water project

ClearCorrect, a leading manufacturer of clear aligners, recently reached a milestone in its charitable project, Phase Out. Since the launch of its first initiative with “charity: water” (phase out unsafe drinking water) on Jan. 1, ClearCorrect has raised more than $60,000, which will help about 3,000 people gain access to clean and safe drinking water.

Of the $60,000 raised so far, $36,555 has been allocated to funding the first five projects with charity water in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The funding will help create spring protections, rainwater catchments and large-scale gravity-fed water systems that will have dozens of distribution points to serve a large population.

These projects are planned for a mix of villages, schools and clinics with a strong focus on hygiene, sanitation training and community buy-in to ensure sustainability and prevention of water-borne diseases.

“It is hard to believe that there are still people out there who don’t have safe drinking water. Phase Out is an amazing effort and an amazing project, and I’m proud to be a part of it,” said Dr. Annette Murphy, a ClearCorrect provider.

When asked how long the company intends to run the Phase Out project, Jarrett Pumphrey, Clear Correct CEO, responded, “For as long as we can make a difference.”

To see the video, please visit www.clearcorrect.com/phaseout.

About ClearCorrect

ClearCorrect works with more than 11,000 clinicians, making it a leading manufacturer of clear aligners. The company offers an affordable and doctor-friendly approach, including a phase-based system to enhance flexibility and control for clinicians. For more information, visit www.clearcorrect.com or call (888) 331-3323.